

BLOWS MUST DECIDE

In 1774 what was the attitude of most Americans towards England and the king.

How did Americans feel about war in 1774?

Why did England believe it had to control the American Colonies?

How did the British view the Boston Tea Party?

After the Boston Tea Party England passed a series of laws called _____ to control the Americans

What did Americans call the Coercive Acts?

What actions did England take in response to the Boston Tea Party?

How did the American colonies respond to the Intolerable Acts?

Which important Founding Father represented Massachusetts at the First Continental Congress?

In the 1700's elites were defined as people who were born with a title of nobility or born wealthy. . Elites were considered by most people to be better than everyone else. How did John Adams feel about the elites.

At the First Continental Congress John Adams said that, "Thirteen clocks are starting to strike as one." What did he mean by this statement?

When it was clear that the British were massing troops to attack the colonists, the First Continental Congress told the American people to

In 1775 the British sent troops to Concord Mass to capture arms and ammunition. What did Paul Revere do?

What did the colonists do after the British troops shot American farmers at Lexington Green?

In May of 1775 the Second Continental Congress was formed and met in

Who did the Second Continental Congress choose to lead the American army?

The first great battle of the Revolutionary War was a British attack on Americans who held _____ near Boston. Although the British won this battle they lost a third of their troops which gave the Americans confidence they could beat the British

After Washington took command of the Continental Army he found that it was

What was the relationship of African Americans and the First Continental Army?

Even after all that had happened between the British and the American Colonists, Americans were still reluctant to go to war with the British. The Second Continental Congress sent one last plea for peace to King George called the _____

How did King George react to the Olive Branch Petition, sent by the Second Continental Congress?

Thomas Paine wrote the pamphlet, "Common Sense" which was widely read throughout the colonies. Why was it important?

What was the main idea of Thomas Paine's, "Common Sense?"

How did the Second Continental Congress respond when it was clear that the British were going to attack New York?

Who was the author of the Declaration of Independence?